ANYTHING FOR A FRIEND

"Russell Davis' second novel is a fresh and funny round with the early teenage set, its lingo wonderful, its pace chain lightning, its stamp authentic. It is in addition so much more that it deserves to be considered as a serious novel with a timely and important message, for it deals with the theme of fakery, fakers and show-offs in racial integration."

8:30 RESISTANCE AND SURVIVAL — FOUR SURVIVORS' VIEWS Early last summer, a discussion between four authors, each of whom has written about his experiences in Nazi concentration camps, took place at the National Book League in London under the auspices of The Jewish Quarterly in association with Hutchinsons, the publishers of Night and Hope by Arnost Lustig, one of the participants in the discussion. The other three are Eugene Heimler, author, Night of the Mist (Bodley Head); S. B. Unsdorfer, author, The Yellow Star (Thomas Yoseloff); and Ezra Jurman, whose stories have not yet been published. The chairman of the symposium was Jacob Sonntag, editor of the Jewish Quarterly. All four men had in common the fact that they were mere youngsters when the holocaust began in Bohemia, Hungary, Slovakia and Germany. In this program, they begin their discussion by considering Raoul Hillberg's The Destruction of the European Jews. July 9
